

I trust that Mrs. Hamilton and Jean are well and that you have had a good rest over the summer. Also, I hope that you have had a moment to scan over my latest literary effort, especially the Tales of Yesteryear. I would like to have your unbiased and frank criticism of it. My purpose in writing such a chapter is to give the high school and junior high school boy something that will grip him and hold him in the real tangibles of life without a lot of the paper pulp unrealism. I believe that coaches from their experiences could draw from a large storehouse of valuable information that they could write as first class literature for the boys coming up. The high school and college idealism should be fostered.

I imagine you will be rather surprised to read the October issue of The Rotarian in which Major Griffith and I are engaged in the discussion of subsidizing the athlete. He is taking the negative and I am taking the affirmative. But I believe something should be done openly as a substitute for the clandestine subsidizing now going on. Now I would appreciate your criticism of this article after you have read it.

With all good wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,
