

of the article that you already have, namely, how to thwart the defense when they pick you up all over the floor. It is an orderly article and I approach it by showing the set plays in the offensive half of the court. Then I show the principle of eluding the defense when they try to pick you up far down the field.

I lecture on this at the Iowa State High School Athletic Association Coaching School at Boone, Iowa, this summer, and also at the Kansas State Athletic Association Coaching School in Topeka, Kansas. It is something that has never appeared in print and this might be a better article if it is not too much like the one you have.

I am wondering if you would be averse to sending me a galley proof of the article that you have so that I could read it, and if it doesn't touch this article I think it is something entirely new to the coaches of the country, generally speaking. It is my own invention and I have never published it heretofore. So many teams are upset by this razzle-dazzle game that an orderly way of meeting it would be, I am sure, appreciated by the majority of coaches. What do you think?
