people. Six months later at the approach of the Holy Jewish Holidays, Yom Kippur, which is the holiest holiday in the Jewish religion, the father sent a wire to his son at Notre Dame as follows:

"My dear son, do not forget Yom Kaippur starts tomorrow."

He received an answering wire as follows.

"I am glad Yom Kippur starts tomorrow. Put Ten Dollars on his nose. I will say three Hail Mary's and hope to hell he comes in first."

You can also tell them the one about the athlete who was failing in his studies and who was met by the Professor of History in the corridor. The Professor was a great basketball fan and was quite anxious to have the boy pass his examinations and stated, to the boy, "I wish you would do something about your studies, why don't you sit down and work on your History?"

The boy in a very gruff voice answered, "Gee, I ain't got no time for nuttin but me English."

I hope your dinner goes over Doctor, and I know that you will make a big success of it.

With very best regards to yourself and your family, I remain

Very sincerely yours,
