

November 17, 1938.

Mr. Orvall M. Mosier,
Vice President, American Air Lines,
Chicago Opera Building,
Chicago, Illinois.

Dear "Red":

Your nephew, Miller Cameron, dropped in the office to have me look at his knee. He has had a little trouble with synovitis or water on the knee, but we have been able to straighten him out and he is now in good shape. His first trouble was the result of a football injury on the freshman team and we fixed that up for him. Then he played for his fraternity in a touch football game and re-injured it last week, and again we were able to fix it up for him.

He had mentioned before that you were his uncle, but in the rush of things I had failed to drop you a line to congratulate you on your continued climb upward. But when he mentioned it again the other day I said, "I am going to write old Red a line and let him know that I am proud of his progress." Of course, Miller is very proud of you, Red. He told me confidentially that you were helping him through school, and then he mentioned that you thought he was not aggressive enough in getting a job.

This is the first time that he has mentioned a job to me, although he told me he mentioned the necessity of it to Howard Engleman, one of his fraternity Brothers. I said that of course we would help him, and we took his class schedule so now we are going to try to find some hours that he has off and put him to work. We are not hiring him because he is an athlete, but because he has a fine personality and we want to encourage him in the way of working so that he will take his responsibility in life.

I am very fond of Miller. In fact, he has such a pleasing personality that when he first came in the office I was rather attracted to him. I don't ordinarily treat all football injuries, as we have a trainer hired for that purpose, but this kid was so pleasing to me in his approach that he sold himself right away, and I did it as a kindness rather than as an obligation to football.

I wanted to drop this note to you to let you know that we should be glad to see you if at any time you are ever through Lawrence,