

Regarding the two cuts on a page, or two or three cuts on a page, I know you are just as anxious to have the best book possible, so I am not worrying about the way you handle the text, or upon how you finish the entire book. I know nothing about your job and you do know a lot about mine because you handle so many manuscripts. So while I may say things to you many of them, of course, are made on account of my ignorance of your situation.

However, I do want to emphasize the necessity of having those cuts re-made showing the basket because that is the only thing that shows the location on the floor. The pictures would be utterly useless unless the basket is shown. You could take the same setup out of doors or on the street and it would mean just as much to a coach or player by looking at those baskets out on the street as it would on the basketball court without a basket because the basket shows where the line falls. And that enables the reader to visualize the location, and without location the picture has no value. I trust that you will see this from our viewpoint.

With every good wish, I am

Sincerely yours,
