

October 4, 1937.

Mr. J. A. Hyland,
McGraw-Hill Book Co.,
330 West 42nd St.,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Hyland:

I have just written Mr. Gartner that I received this morning a package of all cut dummies for illustration. I am sending back to him the last batch of diagrams. I have also submitted a list of the original drawings or photostats of the diagrams that I now have on hand. This brings us to a pretty good working set-up.

When the galleys come in from Miss Giles now we will have our house in order, so that we can place our diagrams and our illustrations before us to aid us in our galley reading.

Mrs. Allen is writing Miss Giles to the effect that when we read the master manuscript we indicated on that manuscript just where we wanted every one of the diagrams and illustrations placed. Miss Giles said something in her letter about wanting Mrs. Allen to place those. We have again checked them over and we find that they have all been located in the proper position, and if Miss Giles will follow the markings on the master manuscript it will save a repetition of this work on the part of Mrs. Allen.

We are delighted with the way things are going, and we are staying right on the job both day and night to rush out all the stuff that comes in to us that day.

With all good wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

FCA:AH

Director of Physical Education.

(over)