

In team sports an individual participating in all games will receive the same number of points as earned by his team. However, if he participates in part of the games he will only be awarded points in proportion to the number of games in which he played.

For example, if his team is awarded 150 points for winning basketball and there were 5 games played, an individual playing in one game would receive one-fifth of the 100 additional points, or 20 points. This twenty, plus the 50 entrance points, would allow him a total of 70 points.
