#2 Suggestions from Basket Ball Questionnaire

A. R. Gilbert, Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa

- #9 This would complicate free throw lanes. When player is in act of throwing for basket and is fouled, there might be some merit in awarding one point and one throw instead of two throws. Deliberate fouls on players making shots from reasonable or comparatively "sure" spots should be checked.

R. E. Bowles, Wm. Jewell College, Liberty, Mo.

Do away with the jump ball at center.

F. R. Fulmer, K. S. T. C., Kearney, Nebraska

- #8 (a) Old gyms would not permit

Present rules are O. K.

H. V. McDermott, University of Oklahoma

1. To cut down tall center's importance, make the center jump play rotate among the other (8) players. This would make a center play a team play rather than a one man specialty act.

John F. Lance, K. S. T. C., Pittsburg, Kansas

Why should a captain not be allowed to decline a penalty as in football? Example: Player of team A breaks for basket. Player of team B pushes, holds or trips player of team A as he breaks for basket. Official calls a foul on player of team B just before player of team A makes good his shot at the basket. Why should we reward the defensive player for having fouled the offensive player by taking the basket away from the offensive team and allowing but one free throw?

V. T. Trusler, State Teachers College, Emporia, Kansas

Eliminate the free throw entirely.

C. Youngworth, Yankton College, Yankton, S. D.

I still think some better plan of play can be devised than the center jump after every goal. More and more the effectiveness of center play is dominated by the official tossing the ball. No two men do it uniform. Very few can toss it the same every time. The resultant to me is that a large
