

The main function of education is "to train the human mechanism towards efficiency as an instrument of self-expression, with reference to the various opportunities and responsibilities of life". All agencies of education should aim at these common ends. This does not mean that extra curricular activities should contribute an amount comparable to that furnished by the curriculum; but they should be integers in the plan.

One century of American pioneer work in physical education showed the place of motor activity in the school curriculum, and,
