

the Rabbi say?"

The boy answered stubbornly, "You told me that I could pick any school that I wanted. It's Notre Dame that I ~~want~~ desire ~~to go to.~~ above all others."

Reluctantly the father kept his bargain, and sent him to Notre Dame. But he cautioned him not to forget the teachings of his own people. Six months later at the approach of the Holy Jewish Holidays, Yom Kippur, which is the holiest holiday in the Jewish religion, the father sent a wire to his son at Notre Dame as follows:
