But it's just coming on--coming on--coming on,
 In the face of all this when the last hope seems gone;
 Still plying and plying--whatever the load,
 Coming on--coming on--to the end of the road.

There's only one reason for games thrown about,
 Not winning or losing but playing them out;
 Not merely to pick up the cheers that are due,
 Forgotten tomorrow when others break through;

Through fogs and through shadows that hold one at bay,
 Well knowing how little it matters if one
 Keeps pounding along till to the end of the run.

Regardless of score and the break of the game,
 The raw lash of fate and the echo of fame
