

those excused from military drill and athletics through physical disabilities. With the cooperation of the university, these boys are now made to attend classes in physical education for which no credit is given.

"There is no talk of curtailment in any part of our sports program. We have made it a policy here never to cut athletic squads. For next year in particular we want to get every man interested out for a sport."

The final sentence may well be set down as the keynote of the attitude of virtually every college answering the survey.

II. THE QUESTION OF PRICE REDUCTIONS IN ADMISSIONS FOR MEN IN UNIFORM

In view of the obvious dependency of this country's future welfare upon the members of its armed forces, it is natural that every reasonable consideration should be given them when they appear in a body or singly at a box office or ticket stand. That college athletic directors and their executive committees are setting a good example to others in this field is indicated by the following results of the survey:

Will Offer Reduced Prices	Will Admit Without Charge	No Reduction	No Action Taken So Far	No Report
46.5%	9.6%	.6%	18.5%	24.8%

The reason given for planning no reduction was based on the comment that "our admissions are already so low that a further decrease would bring them to the vanishing point". No actual figure for the current price level was given.

Of those who have taken no action, a further breakdown of the figures indicates that nearly 50 per cent expect a reduction to go into effect when a ruling is made and only 3.4 per cent doubt that a decrease will be effected. The balance were unable to say one way or another.

Failure to receive a comment from one out of every four replies is somewhat regrettable. However, there is no reason to suspect that the action in this group
