Dear Colleagues:

It just occurred to me that you three women would be in different college areas of the United States this summer. In your quest for study and pleasure it would be a fine thing if you could bring back with you new ideas to be incorporated in our physical education program here at the University of Kansas.

While at San Francisco this spring attending the convention of the National Health and Physical Education Association, I visited at Stanford University and picked up the Stanford Daily, dated April 6. The Glee Society, which is the society at Stanford, was sponsoring a faculty day. With this thought in mind I collaborated with a group of student leaders in presenting over the air last evening on our "Physical Education for Health" series a discussion on a future student-faculty play day. The students who took part in this discussion were: C. H. Miller, president of the Men's Student Council; Volva Wilson, president of the W.S.C.A.; Dan Hulse, president of the Men's Pan-Hellenic; John Gilson, president of the Independent Student Association; Wayne Ross, president-elect of the K Club; Nelson H. Sullivan, past president of the K club; Bob Galloway, president of the K K's; and Marilee Hart, representing the Jay Jays. These eight student leaders were very strong for this idea.

We had in mind a mammoth student-faculty play day where the entire student body with the faculty could play games, and in combination with this we proposed having a "recognition day" to award and honor all athletic participants, both men and women, in intercollegiate athletics, varsity athletics, and N.A.A.
