

I will be utterly frank concerning my reactions to the coming Big Six basketball campaign this winter.

If we cannot win it, we would rather that Louis Menze of Iowa State win it.

I notice some of the coaches know more about all the other teams in the Big Six than their own. I am not worrying about the other teams, I am worrying about my own.

Jack Gardner has a bunch of old age destroyers on his team. If aging basketball players provide the key to success, he's got the answer. One of his Varsity players this year was a freshman at Kansas in 1937.

A year ago I thought Kansas State would win the title this year because Gerald Tucker, Winfield flash, enrolled at Manhattan. But since he migrated to Oklahoma it would see logical now that Oklahoma should win it.

George Edwards will make sure that he is noticed in the Big Six before the season is over. Herbie Gregg, the "scintillating phantom" of his last years team will enroll the second semester and somebody had better look out! A. J. Lewandowski, Cornhusker, made a big splurge last year at Nebraska and Nebraska followers are expecting much from the Cornhusker coach.

I am going to spend my time worrying about my team and not the opponents.
