

good thing -

There is so much in my mind about the whole business, I may not make myself clear.

Personally; I should like for J. J. to belong to a good society and here are my reasons - As you know, Rosedale offered little socially, and only one from her class went to K. U. She lead a rather lonely life there because she just didn't fit in with a group who started "going steady" as Saphomores & married when school was out after graduation. He didn't approve of the social set-up - (and we are not snobbish) and the hours that were kept. Then - a year at a girls' school really cut her off from what was left. She is not man crazy, but I want her to have a normal association with
