

hostel program is active in Washington, D. C., and a summer camp is operated there by the Boys' Club.

In Los Angeles, California, playground groups took camping trips to Griffith Park, Los Angeles' 3,000-acre city park.

Schools of Topeka, Kansas, held week-end outings at a nearby summer camp.

In other cities, building an outdoor recreation center provided an activity in itself. A Florida church congregation built its own playground, with boys and girls furnishing both labor and ideas.

Music

Only a few teen-age musical organizations have made the headlines, but hundreds of programs provide both fun and music appreciation. Many centers teach their members to play musical instruments. Several have organized club orchestras.

A teen-age band led by a Lions Club member in Rockville, Connecticut, made its debut at a club dance and acquired a financial backer. A midwestern church has its own youth symphony orchestra, while the young people of another
