

This year's Homecoming celebration is simplified and streamlined to conform with the spirit of the times. It is arranged to be of interest to the soldier and sailor student trainees on the campus, as much as for the civilian students and the returning alumni who will be here.

Tomorrow, Friday, evening at 7:30 o'clock in Hoch Auditorium the referee will toss up the ball in the tip-off for the fierce and fiery basketball game between the Army Specialized Training Unit and the Kansas varsity. The army boys are said to be really good, with talent aplenty,----tall ones, short ones, expert shots and fast breaking runners----grown on the plains of Indiana, Minnesota, and other basketball strongholds. They are not permitted to play intercollegiate ball, but they can do this intramural sport. This is their one big chance of the year. They are filled with ambition to do things to the varsity----and they may do them. It will be a battle.

Between halves of the basketball game Friday evening come the introduction of Homecoming Queen candidates, and then the announcement of the Queen herself with her attendants. Ernie Pontius, that suave, debonair master of ceremonies, will introduce the coaches and the members of the football team who are to represent Kansas in the fateful football game on Kansas field the next day.

After the game the crowd will be regaled with as colorful a celebration as one could imagine. Led by Russell Wiley and his brilliantly uniformed K U band, the entire crowd marches from the auditorium to the south practice field, south east of Memorial Stadium. Rows of soldiers and sailors will line the way, holding torches aloft to light the line of march. On the practice field Reed Whetstone and his Ku Ku's will have a huge bonfire.

There beside the bonfire on a platform will be resurrected the famous old Doc Yak and his Medicine Show, dormant these past ten or a dozen years. Doc Yak and his pep producing pills. They are guaranteed to vitalize,
