

student home with a lifetime recreation, - with a favorite sport which will insure for him activity and freedom in his maturity.

Physical education is a fundamental method of education, - a method which proceeds by means of or through predominantly physical activities. Physical education is much broader than simply a program to improve health. It is a fundamental technic whose ultimate value may be to improve, besides health, the qualities of courage, initiative, perseverance, and self-control; sympathy, information and understanding; for the central nervous system should be as active when the children play as when they study, - and neurograms should be created and modified as rapidly and as permanently on the playground as anywhere in school life.

Man and animals, as depicted in carving, sculpture, drawings and literature, are active creatures. From earliest times motor skill and human movements had art and religious, utilitarian and military values. Paul said, "I will run a race of patience for the prize, which is the high calling of Christ Jesus." And Daniel said, "I will not defile myself with the King's meat."

We learn by doing. Therefore, competitive athletics is intensive training. It gives the boy so much pain to lose and so much joy to win that he will harness himself with inhibitions so that he may attain the coveted goal, which is victory. A boy will say "No" a thousand times to temptation so that he may say "Yes" once to victory and to a championship.

The Kansas team leaves tomorrow for Columbia, Missouri, where they play the Missouri Tigers in Brewer Fieldhouse. In the Kansas dressing room those five boys who start the game will be told that they are the only five boys in the United States who can wear Kansas' name across their chests in the starting battle. Words of confidence and caution will be given them. Their teammates, huddled together in that small dressing room, will feel the sense of belonging that only boys on a team may possess in an athletic contest. The spirit of oneness, the esprit de corps, the morale of this Jayhawker basketball team will
