

Paper Has Endless Variety of Uses

 these various paper products for almost 60 years.
 Carpenter simply buys sacks, bags, paper plates, cups, wrapping paper, Christmas papers, letter paper and ten thousand and one other items. It buys them from the mills and manufacturing plants that specialize in each thing. It buys them in quantity and keeps a supply on hand in its warehouses.
 The company's own salesmen of course have detailed catalogs of everything the firm handles. They call on your grocer and baker and druggist and everybody else who sells you anything, and they sell him the particular kinds of paper he needs in his business. Then, from their nearest stockroom they ship him a thousand sacks, or half a million, or whatever it is he wants.
 They sell on a wholesale basis and in large quantities. They buy their supplies by the carload; in 1940, for example, Carpenter brought into Oklahoma City approximately 300 carloads of paper in various forms. A lot of this is stored for a time in its Grand avenue plant. Sometimes on big shipments it places a customer's order direct with a mill or manufacturer and the shipment is made from

Paper in Many Forms on Display

The Carpenter plant has numerous show rooms where its various products are on display. On the right is a display of a few of the varied items kept in stock. These are mainly processed forms—fancy wrapping paper, paper plates, cups, novelties, etc.

the factory direct to the purchaser. This simply eliminates a handling job. For the most part, however, Carpenter stocks its supplies locally and fills orders from the city warehouse.

Thus it fulfills its role of a paper wholesaler. It keeps on hand every kind and size and shape of paper a customer conceivably might want, and is able to get the order out to him quickly.

 about 22,000 square feet of floor space and this proved ample until 1921 when the company again outgrew its physical properties. It moved in March of that year to the 27-29 Grand avenue location it has just vacated for the new home.

In the Grand avenue building it had 58,000 square feet of floor space scattered over four floors; and in recent years the company has felt an increasing pinch for room.

Carpenter continued its operations in Oklahoma as a branch of the Kansas City Paper House until July, 1931. Then, in keeping with the company's early policy of incorporating an individual business wherever feasible, the Carpenter Paper Co. of Oklahoma was founded.

Paper Keeps Record Of Its Own History

Few arts or crafts have a finer or greater group of books dealing with their crafts than paper. Yet while paper-making had its European origin in Spain, there are few volumes on Spanish books, either ancient or modern, that deal with the craft.
