a similarly disadvantageous cottage in London. Meanwhile poor Mathilde has had a principal attack of bronchitis which came on at 6 sunday morning, & last - like at least 6 monday evening after which it gradually subsided again.
Now she is much the same as usual save looking terribly thin & pulled down.
Your adventure with the superior landlady must have been quite tragic. Like the end was reached when it fortunately changed to comedy. It is a good thing that it turned out no worse: but with all the bathos it must have been anything but amusing. Cathy has just been here & gone, she had got your letter, & what more I knew I told her. I am sorry to know about poor old Trelawney but have not told Mathilde yet for I have seen so little of her since returning. Mrs Rossetti & Christina it seems are gone somewhere, but we dont know where -
