Dear Charlie:

Your Christmas Story came in and I did not delay it even to read it. I did scan it to see if there was any reference to the little fawn, but I didn't run across it. I think it would be best to have the picture of the fawn appear upon the first page preceeding the story, as it would not show up well on the cover. Should there not be some mention of the fawn?

Mr. Farris said that he was already proceeding with the work and that the story will be trimmed to fit your $6\frac{1}{2}$ x $4\frac{1}{4}$ inch envelopes.

I am glad to know you had a nice trip home. Gertrude has already bought the wreathes, which are now on our side porch and will be placed on the graves as soon as the weather permits. It has been raining a bit for the last day or two.

No doubt the story is well worth reading and I shall read it later.

With best wishes to you both, I remain

With love
