Dear Charlie & Mary:

I have received the books you so kindly sent me and I am very glad to have them. Of course, they have no value excepting that of sentiment, which perhaps after all is the greatest measure of worth.

Oddly enough, I was thinking about Hill's Manual a few days ago. Papa was collecting for this Company just prior to his death. He was a man of great affability, perhaps something like my brother Louis, which enabled him to be unusually successful in the collection of accounts. With his wife and five small children, it was quite necessary for him to be earning a sufficient amount to keep them in comfort.

I certainly appreciate your thoughtfulness in these matters.

With love,

Your brother
