soldier and the payments I make to Irene makes them a pretty satisfactory income, and I am quite sure that most of it is being saved.

I shall be glad to see my great-grandsons in Tulsa. Eilene's little boy, although only 13½ months old walks around as importantly as many children much older. Little Owen of course is too young to assume any particular traits so far excepting that of being a lovable little chap. They will all be in Tulsa while I am there.

I have today signed notices to the insurance companies to transfer the insurance to you and Mac. You have been very good in writing me and I hope you will come and see me as often as you can.

Lots of love,
