Dear Blanche and Pat:

Fortunately my sick spell was soon over. I don't know that it was even necessary for me to have gone to the hospital, but I think that it is well to be careful. I was down to the office yesterday and again today, but am not taking things too seriously.

I have lately received a nice letter from Marie containing a picture of my darling great-grandson which I shall carry in my pocket. I don't believe that he and Wayne will find it difficult to get along together in the same envelope.

My illness is of such a peculiar kind and of short duration. One hardly knows whether it is essential to go to the hospital for a day or two, but probably it is wise to give serious attention to anything which seemingly affects the heart.

I love you very much, think you have two splendid grandsons, and am so happy that Pat is coming along well. I am taking it for granted that he has had no relapses.

The Parrishes are being very kind and thoughtful of me and I appreciate it very much. We shall be glad to see you again at the game. Incidentally, in going through the secretary in the apartment some days ago I ran across a snapshot of Kate Matthews of Pewee Valley, Kentucky, and it called her to my mind so well that I wrote her a letter. A reply came rather quickly stating that Jessie, whose picture I painted in colors when you were a baby, had just passed away. As I recall there were three sisters, and I met them all but Jessie.

Lots of love to all of you.

Lovingly,
