Dear Blanche:

I have your letters of the 7th and of the 10th, and was glad to talk to you over the phone. I don't know of anything that would please us more than Pat's recovery. He has made such a brave fight that he certainly ought to win, and those little grandsons of his will prove mighty fine companions for him later on.

Just as soon as Pat can travel with safety, or as soon as you could leave him, we should be very happy to have you visit us here. Yesterday as you have doubtless recalled, was Gertrude's birthday. She would have been seventy-five years old. The flowers you sent were beautiful and I took them to the cemetery and placed them on your Mama's grave. The florists have done their spring planting, and the graves look as brilliant as it is possible for us to make them. Thank you so much for the flowers.

We shall have to wait a little while for Marilyn and Robert to catch up in this baby business, but I am sure that they will have a fine little baby when it does arrive.

Lovingly,
