

very much and most of my friends here play quite often, and I am an ardent movie fan, when there are worth-while or entertaining ones to be seen. Swimming is the one active diversion I enjoy now. I use to enjoy golf, but since I lost Whit I have somehow never been interested in it much - nor does swimming and bridge mean as much to me ^{as it did with him} but I can't spend my "after work" hours alone - and I do enjoy my friends so have tried to do all the things I have always normally enjoyed -

I appreciate the fact that you feel as though you would not want to plan future trips. The most difficult thing I ever planned to do after I came back down here to work was to contemplate a trip without Whit. I never left here for three or four years and then I decided I must - so off I went - alone - to Mexico & on to the States - I found so many pleasant companions, sympathetic friends &
