Dear Owen and Marie:

I was quite interested in that part of your letter of May 23 which told about the baby being hungry. It suggests to me several things. He may have too much in the way of digestive acids which digest his food faster than normally, and in that case your doctor should try to find it out. Another thing is that although from appearances he may be getting plenty of nourishment, it may be that after all his momma is not providing as much nourishment as you think she is.

In all cases I think those two things might well be looked after by your doctor, and it might solve all your problems.

I am very happy that you have a little son, and we may expect great things for him.

With love,
