Dear Marie:

Fearing that I might make a mistake, I am returning to you the data you recently sent me, together with a blank which is easily understood after you read the explanation given thereon.

I would think that it would be sufficient to name your parents and grandparents, unless there should be someone of particular importance that you would like to have included. I should be glad to have your reply at an early date, as my copy has already gone in to the American Historical Society.

I hope that everything runs along nicely with you, and we shall be very happy over the new great-grandson or great-granddaughter as the case may be. I know you will make a fine mother.

Lovingly,
