Mr. R. de Llano, Editor
Excelsior,
Mexico City, Mexico.

Dear Mr. de Llano:

I certainly appreciate your kindness in having your New York Bureau furnish us with the files of Excelsior that we desired.

Our return home was saddened by the sudden death of our youngest child, a fine promising boy of thirteen, who was taken slightly ill at noon the day following our return and without having been considered in any way seriously or dangerously ill, passed away the following morning at 3:30.

This great sorrow naturally crowded out of my mind for the time being, all thoughts of writing for the paper, but very shortly I hope to write some more letters in regard to Mexico, in which I shall endeavor to sum up the impression gained during our visit. We made a number of very interesting acquaintances and friendships and have a higher regard for the Mexican people than we had before.

We trust that the relation between our two nations may continue to be friendly and cordial, and believe such a relation will be for the best interests of both Mexico and the United States.

I shall send you later copies containing letters that I have written.

Sincerely yours,

WCS-HM
