

laid the coverlet on a case and two or three had gathered about it. Another woman heard me confess that I was still gloating over its' possession so was not anxious to dispose of it so she made the scene of the two harlots before King Solomon flash before my mind by exclaiming, "I should think you would not be interested in disposing of it for forty dollars. I will gladly give you that for just this corner", and she marked off a square that included one of the dated corners and a block containing a fine design and one of the lovely colonial buildings. "You see I am making a collection of sofa pillows and just this much would make AS LARGE A PILLOW AS I WOULD WANT", she explained.

It was one of the most interesting studies I have had this summer. Another woman immediately offered to buy the unmutilated half for a couch cover, after a little calculation in width, and the first ladies' eyes grew wide with horror.

The coverlet is still intact!

If you still want the coverlet for twenty five dollars let me know immediately and I will send it to you by express, C.O.D. on October 2nd.

Very sincerely yours,

Mrs. G.H. Morley-
