

WORK

It is a moot question whether a successful man chooses his work or whether the work chooses him. What is important is that they fit, that they become inseparable, and that together they result in satisfaction and service. Henry loved his work, and to it he brought all his energy, endeavor, imagination, and fervor; from it he derived complete satisfaction and a consuming pride. He aimed always at perfection, and when that goal seemed to be reached, he set a new horizon.