This is a black and white woodblock print illustration of a phoenix, a mythical bird from East Asian folklore. The phoenix is depicted in a three-quarter view, perched on a branch. It has a large, fan-like tail with intricate patterns and a long, flowing tail streamer. The bird's feathers are detailed with various patterns, including scales on its back and wings. The text '鳳鳴' (Houou no Na) is visible in the upper right corner, indicating the bird's name and its associated sound. The illustration is set against a plain background, with some stylized clouds or mist at the bottom.
