

a fire of Musquetry commenced on the part of the Spaniards, perhaps just at that instant more than ^{any} other way anxiety painted strongly in every one's countenance; particularly as just then the boats seem'd slack in pushing forward, at last the Musquetry ceased apparently owing to a few shot of a Grape from the long boat of the Prince of Wales which had a 24th Carronade in its bow - this seem'd to have great effect upon the sailors who now pulled with spirits & soon reach'd the shore, some of the Tobago Corps unaccustomed to being shot at, fired from the boat before they landed, however luckily no accidents occur'd from it & we
