Clerke of the Crowne office — The Clarke of ye Crowne office read against Babbingtons confession

L: of Scotts — The Queene against said, I will not of and pass matter

The was read for the to Anthonie Babington

L: of Scotts — To wch the said yr Anthonie Babington and all the world said it, they lye of it, and I will be my owne and writinge to Babington. And to Babingtons l[ett]r the said, I never saw that l[ett]r nor heard of it

L: Trer — Then said the Lord Treas[urer] proved for receipt of Babingtons l[ett]r.

Secr[etary] — Then the Secr[etary] showed an answere to Babingtons letter from her mties name typed but by a forreigne man in a blewe coate, who had opened all the pointe of Babingtons l[ett]r. Upon morrow there was made of the Earle of Arundell the next and blubbered out saying. Woe is me that that euer I sate supposed sho[uld] for my sake, and after blubbering a time, the said, yt even I made any pract[ise] against the Queene my Sister, I pray God I never sho[uld] the face of God, I euer written I confesse all any Jesuite kept captive as I am, might doe, yet about my deliverance, but never against the Queene.

Queene. I confesse for the Catholique cause from their heart I will worke, and yt I could with my blood to save them from destruction, I would and yt it may be so, I pray yu[r] lay that on me, and therein I rest.

L: Trer — The Lord Treas[urer] said the Queene ought not man to doate for their Conscience, but they might enioye the liberties of their Consciences yt they will live as dutifull subj[ects], and therefore reforme yr opinion eftsoone.

L: of Scotts — The Queene said she read it as in a booke

L: Trer — The Lord Treas[urer] said they that write so Madam write also that the Queene of England is not Queene.

L: of Scotts — Then she pickt a quarrell against M[aste]r Secretarie saying that I[t] had bin for her enemie, and for himself, and practised with the certaine against her, but M[aste]r Walsingham spoke for I to yu[r] and an honest man, said even the word of an honest man, wherupon yu[r] gave him the to me.

M[r] Secretarie — M[aste]r Secretarie rose up and came to the end of the Table, standing in the midst before the state, and said, Madam, I stand charged by yu[r] to have practised somthinge against yu[r] I.
