bee vnited togeth͛r: Melvine (said shee th͛n) remend me to my some, and tell him that I have not done any thing pticuliall to his estate, and said vnto him from me, that he trust not too much to practise and politie, for practises and politik will have an end. The resolving hirselfe againe into teares, shee said Melvine farewell, farewell good Melvine, and w͛th her eyes and her cheeke all bee sprinkled w͛th teares as they were, shee kissed him, saying unto again good Melvine farewell, and pray for thy M͛tie and Queene. Then shee turned herselfe vnto the Lords, and told them that shee had certaine requests to make vnto them. One was for a some of money (as w͛th the Amiot Pawlet knowe) to bee paid to one Curle her servant. Next that her poore servants might have and enioye that w͛t shee had given them by her will and testament, and that they might be favorablie intreated and sent safe into their Countries, and their as I trust, shee doe[s] thinke yo[u] my Lords to doe: Answere was made by S͛r Amias Pawlet to this effect, I am not forgotfull of the money yo[r] grace doth speake of, therefore yo[r] grace needs not to rest in suspect of the not

Sr Amias Pawlet

not performing yo[r] requests, and I am sure yo[r] servants shalbee well vsed. Then shee said yet there rested one requests more, w͛th I would make to yo[u] my Lords, w͛th is, that it would please yo[u] to permitt my poore distressed servants to bee present about me at my death, that being eyes may beeholde and being eares witnes how patientlie being Queene and M͛tie shall ordaine her ouerthrow, and that thereby they might bee able to make relation when they come into their Countrie how I dyed a true and constant Catholique to her Religion

Earle of Kent

Then my Lord of Kent did answere then Madam (quoth hee) that w͛th yo[u] have more desired is not convenientlie bee granted. for yf it should it were to bee feared least some of those w͛th speeches or other occasions would bee prejudiciall vnto yo[r] grace and troublesome also vnpleasinge to vs and our companie, wherefore was I have said some opportioned, or yf ought a request might bee granted, they would not stick to put some suspitions temporis tendinge to witchcraft in practise, and yf it were

Lord of Scott