Lo: Cecill. Wee have heard nothing that might lead us to thinke that Brooke acquitted you, hee was onely in the surprising Treason, for by accusing you, hee should have accused his brother.

Raw: Hee doth not much care for that.

Lo: Cecill. I must judge the best, the Accusation of his brother was not voluntary, have feared any thing as much as to save his brother.

Cobham Exam. Hee saith hee had a booke written against the Title of the King which hee had of Rawleigh, and that hee gave it his brother Brooke, and that Rawleigh said it was foolishly written.

Attor: After the Quy vous mythe in Cheapside before the Maior of London, Cobham came to me and told him but intended to trouble without hearing the Queene or Prince, now in this Discontentment S^r you gave him this booke, and bee gave it to his brother.

Raw: I now turne at him, hee took it of my Table, for I well remember a little before that time I removed a Candlestick from S^r Amyas Powlton, and for that I did intend to answer it, I resolved to leave my Estate settled, therefore I lay out all my loose papers, amongst which was this booke.

Where had you that booke? Lo: Hen: Howard. Raw:

In the dore Lord Grey study after his death.

Did you not shew or make known the booke to more? Lo: Cecill

Not my Lord. Raw:

The Lord Cecill said that his father Lo: Cecill. being employed in the affaires of State at that time, it was like enough hee had many bookes and papers written against the then Queene and the State which might come to his hand by disorder of such officers.

I prove there was 2 tumultuous Conspiracy Attor: you & Cobham in the Tower for after hee said it was against the Kings title, hee denyed it againe.

Firste my Lord Cobham confessed it & S^r Dym: Wide. after hee had subscribed it hee retracted it againe, yet hee always said to mee y^t the drift of it was against the Kings Title.

I protest before God and all his worke Raw: I gave him not the booke, and here S^r Robte Wroth whispered to one that sate by him.

My Lords I must here complaine of S^r Attor: Robte Wroth, hee saith that this Evidence is not materiall.

I will give my word for S^r Robte Lo: Cecill. Wroth.

I now
