The Bp. of Winch: spake so low y^t hee hoard/

The Earle of Pembroke said that the proceedings of this great business in his observacon had the signall of Justice Shin that could judge onely by the words of men all thiefe your more learned did but ioyne to puddle the streame of Justice/

The Duke of Lenox spake somewhat low and after the Scottish mann, so that I could neither well heare nor understand him onely hee agreed in the Censure with the rest./

The Lo: Dyer said that hee had heard the offences and the opinion of the Judges whose mouthes hee said are our Interpreters of the law, and hee had heard all the rest of the Lords agree vpon ye misthiefes and Inconveniences of the good offences, and that hee said was sufficient for him to agree in ye Censure of the Offendes with the rest/

The Archbp. said that Homo fruitus maxim Credit ad exemplu, sed non ostendit but to make a more Playne his sence sence, Justice like the cruell mother beates her Children with rodds to vexatio dat intellectu (as hath been said) I would wd. Lumpen would make vse of this affliccon that hee might bee wise not to offend anie more, wd. Lumpen and I could have brought a Precedt of his in case of Throwmirton and before I did Labo^r^ to make shewe of his estate and hee said hee did then give him admonicon to take heed of ye Starre-Chamber and to call to mynde S^r^ Iames Dyer his Censure against S^r^ Anthony Ashley, This is a great offence to abuse the Kings Court with falshood who is a lover of truth. Lett him make good vse of this punishment, for if hee bee found in the state of Enthusiasme wise, a greater offence will draw on a greater punishment. As for the questions that have been made by those Cute in praudence of Justice and the proceedings of the State in the businesse hee that hereafter hoard in this place of a wise noble man that the debates of grounde heads by questions and Argumte against ye Consultacon of the State are like the head of glasse, against the head of brasse, which if they hitt doth dash the head of glasse in peeces,
