

The first Serbian grammar, written by Vuk Stefanović Karadžić, was published in 1813. It was the first Serbian grammar to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet. It was the first to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet.

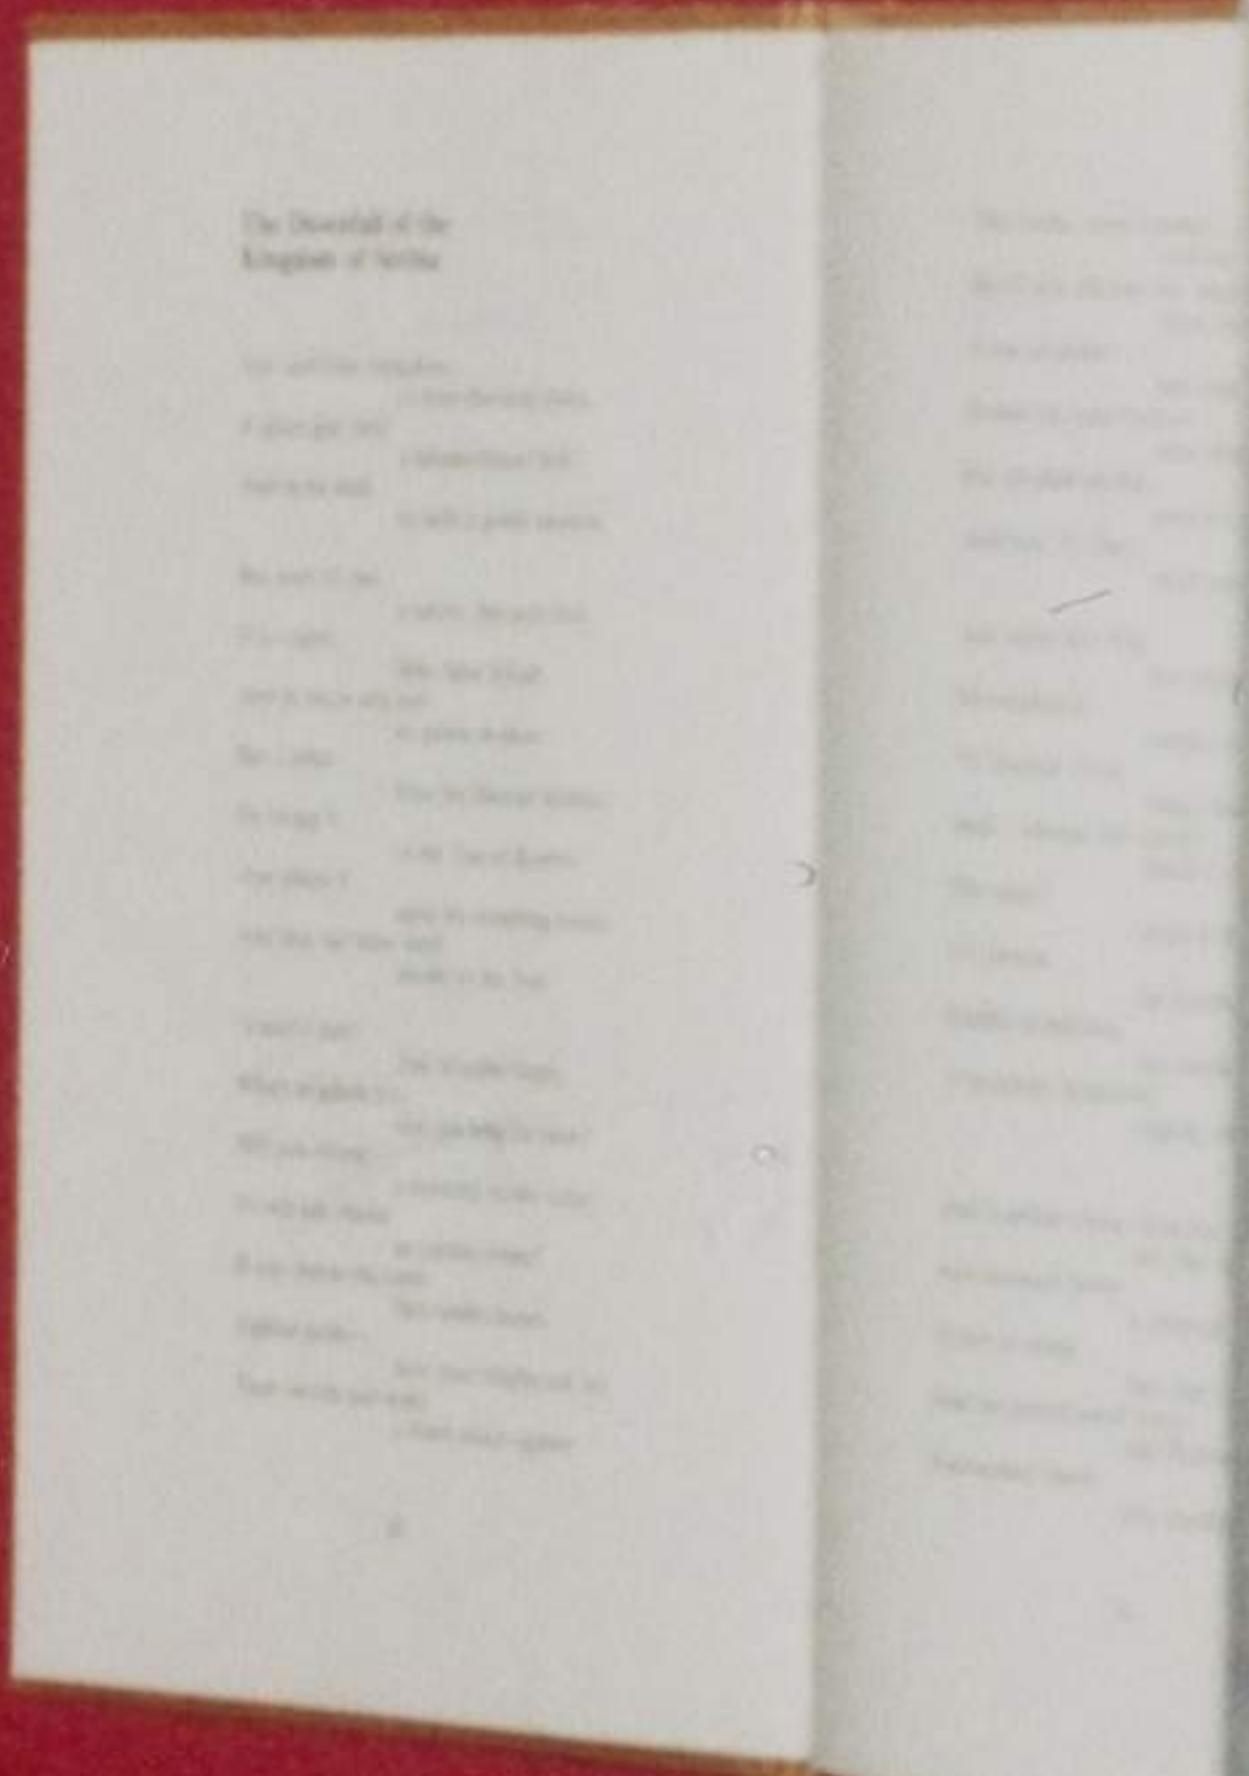

The first Serbian grammar, written by Vuk Stefanović Karadžić, was published in 1813. It was the first Serbian grammar to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet. It was the first to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet.

The first Serbian grammar, written by Vuk Stefanović Karadžić, was published in 1813. It was the first Serbian grammar to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet. It was the first to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet.

The first Albanian grammar, written by Shaban Demiraj, was published in 1964. It was the first Albanian grammar to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet. It was the first to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet.

The first Albanian grammar, written by Shaban Demiraj, was published in 1964. It was the first Albanian grammar to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet. It was the first to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet.

The first Albanian grammar, written by Shaban Demiraj, was published in 1964. It was the first Albanian grammar to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet. It was the first to be written in the Latin alphabet, and it was the first to be written in the Cyrillic alphabet.